Are you curious about the vehicles that qualify for Section 179 deductions? The IRS list of vehicles over 6000 lbs holds the key. In this quick guide, we provide a clear and concise breakdown of eligibility, helping businesses maximize tax savings through available deductions.

Get ready to navigate the IRS list and make informed decisions for your heavy-duty business vehicles.

What vehicles qualify for the Section 179 deduction?

Vehicles that qualify for a Section 179 tax write-off include:

- Heavy SUVs, pickups, and vans with more than 50% business use and over 6000 lbs. Gross vehicle weight qualifies for a partial Section 179 deduction plus bonus depreciation.
- Vehicles clearly designated as "work" and have no potential for personal use are typically considered work vehicles.
- Vehicles with no passenger seating, such as cargo vans and box trucks, can qualify.
- Specialty "singular-use" vehicles, such as ambulances and hearses, usually qualify.

Up to $28,900 in 2024 ($27,000 in 2022) of the cost of vehicles rated between 6,000 lbs GVWR and 14,000 lbs, GVWR can be deducted using a section 179 deduction. This limitation on sport utility vehicles does not impact larger commercial vehicles, commuter vans, or buses.

What vehicles qualify for the Section 179 deduction?

• Heavy SUVs, pickups, and vans with more than 50% business use and over 6000 lbs.

• Vehicles clearly designated as “work” and have no potential for personal use.

• Vehicles with no passenger seating, such as cargo vans and box trucks.

• Specialty “singular-use” vehicles, such as ambulances and hearses.

What is Section 179 Tax Deduction?

Businesses can claim the full equipment purchase price (software, machinery, etc.) rather than depreciating it over time using the 179 tax deduction.

If you claim the deduction the year you purchase and put the equipment to use, your taxable income will be reduced by the amount you spent, which means you'll have a lower tax liability.

In 2022, you can deduct as much as your business's net income or $1,080,000 for qualifying equipment, whichever is less. In 2024, the cap rises to $1,160,000. This also means that small businesses can deduct a portion of the cost of qualifying business vehicles under Section 179.

Is It Possible to Claim a Section 179 Deduction on a Used Vehicle?

Yes, you can claim a Section 179 deduction on used vehicles if they are new to both you and your business.

The critical criterion is that the vehicle must be used for business purposes for more than 50% of its operational time.

How to Claim the Section 179 Vehicle Tax Deduction

Unlocking the Section 179 deduction for heavy vehicles involves a crucial step: the completion of IRS Form 4562. This form serves as the cornerstone, not only for calculating depreciation but also for solidifying the vehicle's eligibility.

To ensure precision and compliance with tax regulations, seeking the guidance of a professional vehicle appraiser is not just recommended but integral. Their expertise ensures a seamless process, maximizing your chances of a successful Section 179 deduction claim.

Vehicle Valuation Experts and the IRS Section 179 Deduction

Optimal Section 179 deduction calls for consultation with a vehicle valuation expert. Their expertise ensures an accurate assessment of the vehicle's value, aligning with IRS guidelines. They play a vital role in determining depreciable value and furnishing robust documentation for your deduction claim.
